

Frank J. Quintero

Mayor, Retired
City of Glendale

Frank Quintero has answered the call to service many times throughout his life. After returning home from combat duty in Vietnam and graduating from college with a degree in Political Science, Frank became a Vocational Counselor for veterans in Downtown Los Angeles. His commitment to lifelong education and training soon turned into solid programs, as he helped other returning veterans secure vocational education, training and job opportunities. In 1976, as local aerospace, manufacturing, financial institutions, and employees faced plant closures and mergers, Frank founded the Alliance for Education and opened a second office in Glendale. He began working with employers and educational institutions to retrain those workers for good-paying jobs in the changing economy. Frank worked with multi-national corporations specializing in technology, entertainment, health and finance. His organization helped these companies achieve success with their Southern California investments in Human Resources.

Soon after, the area's growing immigrant community called on Frank. Utilizing his real estate credentials and expertise, he expanded his services to help the region's growing Asian, Middle-Eastern and Latino communities. Working in the areas of commercial real estate, multi-family and business opportunities, Frank has helped thousands of local residents build a solid future for themselves and their families. Families' futures were secured through education, training, business opportunities, and community investments.

Frank has served on California State work force training and development boards for over 20 years. He has served under four California governors.
